Bathroom Design Ideas

Bathrooms still rank high as one of the top considerations for new home buyers. Yesterday's bathroom designs and features are dimming in light of the new fixtures and features available today. Modern bathrooms have a contemporary edge, driven by simplicity, style and price.

Bigger is better...in the shower. Most buyers prefer larger showers over rarely-used soaker tubs. Shower glass enclosures now have options too, like glass screens without a door, frameless glass and in some cases, a steam shower totally enclosed with glass and tile. What else is new? The Kohler DTV custom shower experience. It has multiple body spray jets on the wall and one overhead with digitally controlled temperatures and settings.

Splish, splash, like taking a bath? Some buyers still prefer a tub. New Hydrotherapy tubs are the newest cool thing that are replacing the dated soaker or jetted tubs. Instead of jets, hydrotherapy tubs churn up millions of bubbles – it's like bathing in champagne. Kohler's BubbleMassage Bath with optional chromatherapy (satisfying emotional reactions to colored lighting) has a 360 degree staggered airjet design along with targeted foot and lumbar airjets....wow, take me away.

Bathrooms should be designed with privacy in mind. Buyers still prefer private toilet compartments (with walls and a door) where possible, even in smaller floor plans. However, if a water closet makes a bathroom feel too cramped, then hide the toilet behind a 42" high privacy wall instead. It makes the toilet feel somewhat private and the bathroom feel bigger.

Bright morning light can be achieved in a bathroom without having to compromise privacy. Clerestory (above your head) windows allow natural light to flood in the bathroom. Below the windows, wall space or frosted glass can provide the needed privacy...so you can have both.

Framed-in towel closets may take up valuable floor space. Use cabinets instead for towels and toiletry items. Some towels can be used for decorative purposes or as color accents displayed in open racks like you would find in a spa.

Televisions are popping up everywhere in today's new home designs. Yes, even in the bathroom. A TV allows early risers to catch up on the news, sports, weather and traffic while getting ready for work.
